Correction of plasma lipids and apolipoproteins in Japanese patients with rheumatoid arthritis: a 3-year prospective study. The aim of this study was to clarify the time course of plasma lipid and apolipoprotein values during the treatment of rheumatoid arthritis (RA). The study subjects comprised patients with RA who had not been treated with lipid-lowering drugs for at least 1 year before the start of the study. The patients were treated with a disease-modifying antirheumatic drug (DMARD) including a nonsteroidal anti-inflammatory drug (NSAID). Plasma lipid and apolipoprotein values were determined during the 3-year period of this study. Fifty-one patients participated in the study. After the treatment period, the mean total cholesterol level decreased from 220 mg/dl at the start to 199 mg/dl. The mean triglyceride level decreased from 160 mg/dl to 132 mg/dl. The plasma apolipoprotein (apo) A-I level increased from 171 mg/dl to 185 mg/dl. The apoA-II level increased from 45 mg/dl to 54 mg/dl. After a 3-year treatment period, the lipid values of the patients with RA were ameliorated in a manner similar to those of the normal population. At noon, I ventured into the nearest shop, a local cafe. It was a hustle and bustle inside. Customers' orders poured in as before. We were not in a hurry to serve them. The cafe staff seemed unusually excited. "I heard that someone who visited the bar was found dead in the hotel this morning," said the lady at the counter. I didn't bother to thank her. It was probably just an exaggerated story. In a
